Scholars often categorize spiritual gifts into two broad groups: 1. Charismatic Gifts: These are often seen as supernatural and include abilities like speaking in tongues, prophecy, healing, and miracles. They are typically described as manifestations of the Holy Spirit's power in a dramatic or extraordinary way. 2. Ministry Gifts: These are practical and service-oriented, such as teaching, administration, exhortation, and service. They focus on nurturing and guiding the church community. Understanding this distinction helps believers appreciate the diverse ways in which the Spirit works through them.

The diversity of gifts highlights that no single individual possesses all abilities but that all are necessary for a balanced and effective church body.
